Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Queer Suicide Prevention for General Practitioners

Most people will visit a GP within thirty days of an attempted suicide. Are you confident in your ability to identify and support at-risk LGBTQ clients?

To proactively identify and support LGBTQ people who are at high risk of suicide, ACON developed training to provide GPs with better knowledge, more effective responses and proven tools to improve LGBTQ access and experience with primary health care as well as other care and support services.

Funded by the NSW Ministry of Health and co-designed with the support of clinical professionals and community members with lived experience, this eLearning course will improve your ability to understand and assess distress and suicidality with a focus on LGBTQ populations.

LEARNING OUTCOMES FOR GPs

- Communicate appropriately with LGBTQ people based on an understanding of the differences between sex, gender identity, sexual orientation, and gender expression.
- Recognise LGBTQ mental health and suicide disparities when consulting with LGBTQ people.
- Identify and manage suicide risk factors when consulting with LGBTQ persons.
- Develop and implement practice plans to meet the unique needs of LGBTQ people.
- Respond to distress and suicidality using tools to effectively assess suicide risk and recommend a culturally appropriate/inclusive referral pathway.
